

THE COORDINATE PIRATES

Once upon a time, in the seas of the Carribean was a group of pirates. These magnificent pirates were called the 'Coordinate Pirates'. They sailed the seas searching for the most valuable treasure using their way of locating it. This method was called coordinates. Here are the pictures of these smart pirates.

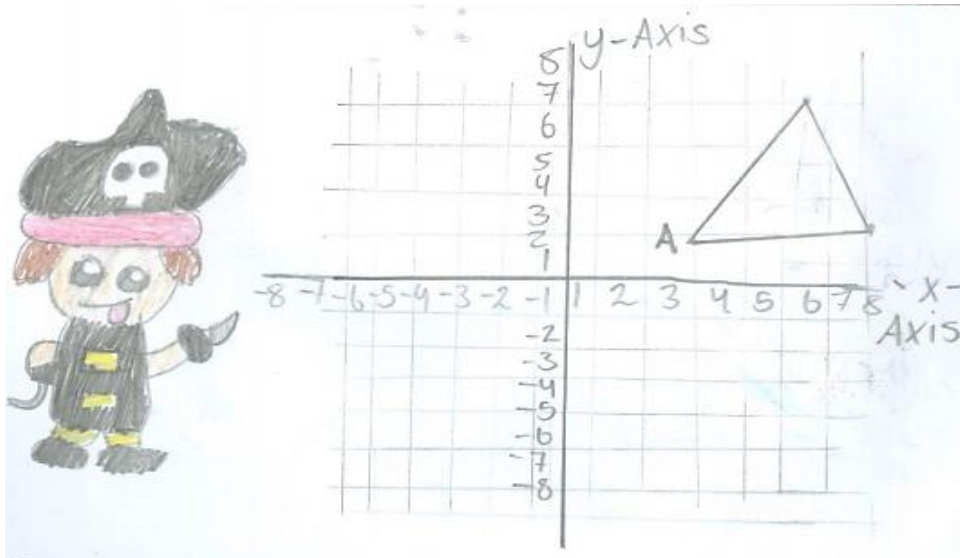

These three pirates each have a job. Captain Jack Henry marks where the enemy ship or treasure is. Sir George Moore finds the coordinates of where these should be translated to. Finally, Miss Lenfrey Hermes is in charge of overseeing the translation.

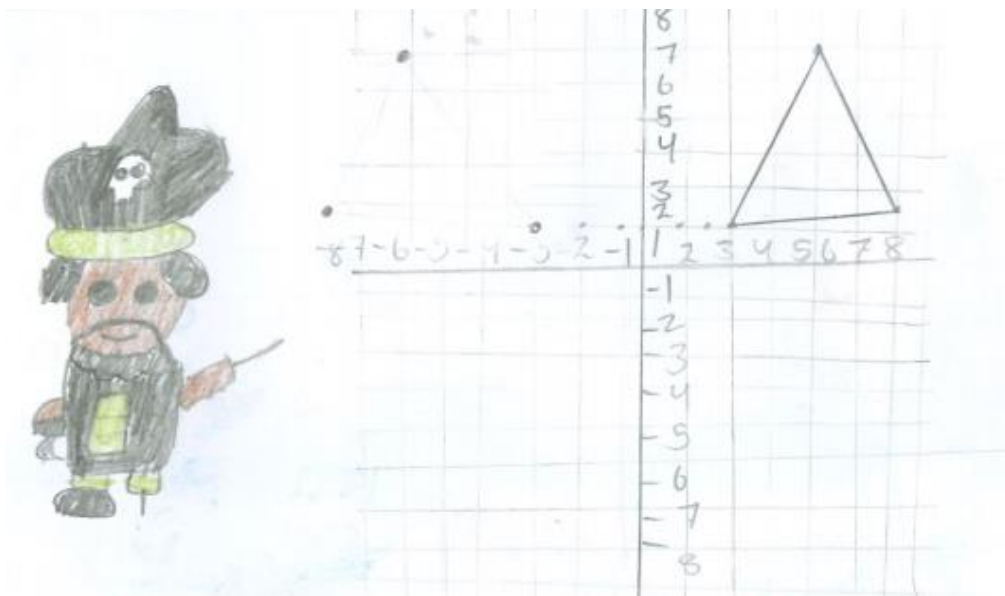

Suddenly, the pirates spot an enemy heading for the same treasure. The team had to do something!

“Wait, if we find the coordinates of where they are, we can translate and get a clear target on them!” exclaimed Captain Jack Henry. The others agreed, so they got to work. There were 3 coordinates to work with, (3, 1), (6, 7) and (8, 2). To do this, they had to go along the X axis and up the Y axis.

Secondly, Sir George Moore counts how many squares left or right and how many squares up or down. The coordinates of point A are (3, 1), which means he has to count the squares and mark where the points should be on the other side.

Lastly, Miss Lenfrey Hermes will translate the shape by joining up the dots.

“Ready for position?” Captain Jack Henry asked.

“Yes, Captain!” responded the others.

The captain moved to position and loaded up the cannons.

They fired the cannons and destroyed the enemy team. Celebrating their victory they continued sailing for the island.

Finally, they arrived at the island. They looked for the coordinates $(-2, 1)$ where the treasure was buried. They began to dig and eventually found the hidden treasure.

“Hooray!” they all exclaimed triumphantly.
